Despite being devoutly pro environment, I must yield that the U.S. habituation to fossil fuels is an environmental, economic and national security disaster that trumps all others. In view of the calculus of global warming, in view of the the petro-dollar funding of radical Wahabism in Saudi Arabia and in view of the spilling of our young people's blood in the sands of Iraq it is hard to imagine what environmental impact could be so severe in the Southwest that would justify a minute longer of the status quo in national energy policy. Get moving!
