I'm writing to protest your moratorium on solar projects as a bald act of industry pandering and a slap in the face to ordinary Americans. Every day, public land uses are jiggered for development and industrial uses far more damaging to the environment, public health and safety than solar power will ever prove to be - the oil industry being a visible example. Denying the same tax and development incentives to solar as is routinely given to other industries is unAmerican. Or perhaps, it is becoming all too American. While you hobble scientific and environmental progress, other countries are surpassing us in forward thinking and solutions offering better quality of life. A village of 500 poor farmers in India is lit with solar power. Why should it be any different here? Shame on you.
